Forty-eighth street has been disturbed reby ghosts supposedly laid long ago. On Tuesday night it was John gabriel Borkman who emerged from his winding sheets and set a small secon of the population of New York to yawning as it had not yawned since its ast visitation of Ibsen and spring fever. The spirit of John had no sooner started west than there was an outbreak further along Forty-eighth street. This time the form centre was the Longacre Theatre. There Robert Whittier played Oswald in "Ghosts" for the first time in New York. other cities have previously enjoyed this

ROOSEVELT CAUGHT, BUT DODGES SPEECH

Curtain at Park Theatre Discloses Colonel Advising Young America.

HE DARTS TO THE WINGS

Col. Roosevelt ungracefully or gracefully, as you please, dodged the making of a speech at the Park Theatre vesterday afternoon at the Lafayette Fund's show.

The Colonel went on the stage to see the children after the play called "Washington and Lafayette." He shook hands with the mimic Gen. Washington and Lafayette and talked to the soldiers at Valley Forge. While he was doing this, somebody rang up the curtain and the Colonel stood revealed in the glare of the footlights to an audience that filled the theatre. But he turned hastily away from Gen

Washington and fled into the wings as the audience applauded and laughed He waved his silk hat, however, and

Col. Roosevelt sat in a box during the performance and was greatly interested in all that went on. He saw one of the characters in "Washington and Lafayette," who was Capt. Isaac Roosevelt, a great-great or great-great-uncle of his. This part was taken by Douglas Robinson, son of Theodore.
